COVERAGE SCENARIOS:

THREAT

The CFO of a small healthcare firm who was also a father and husband in California began to receive threatening emails from an ex-employee. The letters implied that unless the member of staff was given his job back, he would harm the CFO's family. At the same time, letters with similar content began to arrive at the family home.

COVERAGE

Security measures for the family's home and CFO's work were immediately implemented. Crisis responders began investigations into the nature of the threats to determine the legitimacy and it was determined they were legitimate. The response team produced detailed reports about the events and submitted them to the authorities resulting in an arrest and court case.

EXTORTION

The daughter of a policyholder received an unusual message on a social media site. It demanded $35,000 USD or she would be harmed at school, and it listed the school she attended.

COVERAGE

As the message mentioned the academic institution, it was deemed necessary to provide the daughter with covert protection for the following days. Crisis advisors began investigations, and it was revealed that the extortion and the threat were a hoax from a well-known organized crime group.

KIDNAPPING

A family on holiday in Mexico were stopped by an armed gang when withdrawing cash at an ATM. The wife was forced into the gang's vehicle and driven around the city being forced to withdraw sums of cash from the family's bank account. The wife was left in a dangerous part of town.

COVERAGE

Crisis responders located the wife after 6 hours and provided safe transit back to the hotel where they provided temporary security for the family, organized safe flights out of Mexico, and escorted them to the airport. They received financial reimbursement and the wife's trauma counseling costs were covered.

HOME INVASION

A family home was illegally entered by two armed men early in the morning. They refused to release the wife unless the husband went to his place of work and brought back a sum of cash being held on premises.

COVERAGE

Post event security response reviewed the premises and investigated the perpetrators, resulting in them being detained by authorities. Full financial reimbursement and psychological counseling coverage was given to the couple.
